Global Food Supply Chain Sustainability

Recently, the certified operators of Oregon Tilth have been invited by Jhana Senxian of the Aberdeen Group to participate in a web-based survey of sustainability initiatives within the food supply chain, from the retail shelf all the way back to the farm. The Aberdeen Group, in support of the United Nations agenda on sustainable consumption and production, has developed a new study on sustainability and the Global Food Supply Chain (GFSC). Please take a moment to participate in this very important survey – the results of which will help companies optimize performance all across the food value chain and also provide data in support of UN initiatives to confront the global food crisis, articulate policy related to sustainability, and support the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. Be heard and participate in the survey.

A new Web site about U.S. organic agriculture production provides research, news and learning modules from land-grant universities nationwide. eOrganic eOrganic is designed for farmers, ranchers, agricultural professionals, certifiers, researchers and educators seeking science- and experience-based information. It is one of many Web communities within eXtension (pronounced E-extension), a national initiative of the U.S. Cooperative Extension System. The new eorganic site features frequently asked questions, news and events, ask an expert, video clips, articles and lessons and more. Extension organic agriculture specialists from across the nation compiled the content that goes through a review before it's released. Visit the organic community in extension.
